THE HISTORY OF BEER

The branch of the beer family tree, ale or lager, corresponds to the type of yeast used to ferment the beer. Ales are traditionally fermented at warmer temperatures 12 to 21 degrees Celsius, while lagers are typically fermented at cooler temperatures 3 to 10 degrees Celsius.

LAGER & PILSNER

Lager is characterized every bottom fermented beer with crisp and smooth taste and it is consumed after a long period of fermentation during storage. They range from blond (Hell), to dark (Dunkel) and Bock. Pilsner, originated from Czech Republic, particular from Pilsen, differ in terms of their content of hops.

ALE

Looking back through beer history, ales are considered the beer of antiquity. They are top fermented beer with a wide range of flavors and styles. They tend to be fruity and aromatic and include a more robust taste.

WEISS

The traditional refreshing top fermented wheat-based beer of Bavaria, Weizenbier/Weissbier is golden-colored and spritzy.

BOCK

Traditional Bock Beers are generally dark, somewhat strong, and pretty intensely malty. They are typically brewed in Bavaria and are bottom fermented beers.

TRAPPIST

The brewing of Trappist beers takes place in Trappist monasteries. For a beer to qualify for Trappist certification, the brewery must be in a monastery, the monks must play a role in its production and the policies and the profits from the sale must be used to support the monastery or social programs outside. They are top fermented strong, malty ales.

STOUT & PORTER

Porter is a dark beer style developed in London from well-hopped beers made from brown malt.

The name was first recorded in the 18th century, and is thought to come from its popularity with street and river porters and is actually the great-grandpa of today's stout.

ABBHEY

The designation «abbey beers» originally applied to any monastic or monastic-style beer and that closeness of connection with a real monastery confirms a product's quality.
